SAVE TREES SAVE BANGALORE

With each passing day, Bangalore is becoming more and more grey. What once used to be the pensioner's paradise is metamorphosing into a corporate jungle. The charming greenery of the city now faces a bleak future. The city is losing its green cover with at least a dozen trees perishing with each passing day after being chopped to make way for flyovers, skyscrapers and advertisement hoardings or by falling trees due to rains resulting in a drastic change in climatic conditions, increasing pollution, and temperature and so on. When considering a global climatic change, the destruction of plants through cutting and burning could raise atmospheric carbon dioxide levels above expectations and this has an indirect effect on the environment, causing more industrialization, and greater pollution.

There is an urgent need for an action plan to save the vanishing greens or else the city habitants will have to carry oxygen cylinders on their backs. An integrated methodology has to be developed in the city to assess the role of green space to lessen the adverse effects of urbanization. The city still has an opportunity to be rejuvenated and remodeled to symbolize a new beginning for a new India and set a fine example for the other growing cities of the world to follow.
